Nutrition is the most important factor of human health. Malnutrition leads to impaired resistant, immunity and frequent exposure to bacterial infections. certain infections like Tuberculosis and influenza are the well known examples. Micronutrients deficiency also develops different types of anaemia and neurosis. Helminthiasis is the common problem in children which is to be treated with promising anthelmintic. Micronutrients and vitamins supplement is essential after the treatment with anthelmintic. In the present study the researcher has made an attempt to extract essential trace elements and constituents from caralluma attenuata plant to evaluate nutritional value and anthelmintic activity. saponin glycosides are identified by phyto chemical tests. Atomic absorption spectroscopy results reveal that one gram of extract contains 0.009 mg of zinc, 0.324mg of calcium and 0.56mg of magnesium. Anthelmintic activity is evaluated on Perithima posthuma (helminths) using piperazine citrate as saturated drug. Anthelmintic activity is observed at 200 mg/ml with 10 minutes paralysis time and 19.45 minutes death time. Piperazine citrate is used as standard drug its paralysis time is after 25 minutes and 60 minutes as death time. Hence the literature survey has proven that the extract is being used for other activities it can also be used as herbal remedy for prevention of, Helminthiasis & malnutrition.

Keywords Caralluama attenuata, Anthelmintic activity, Nutritional value evaluatoin, Atomicabsorption spectroscopy.
